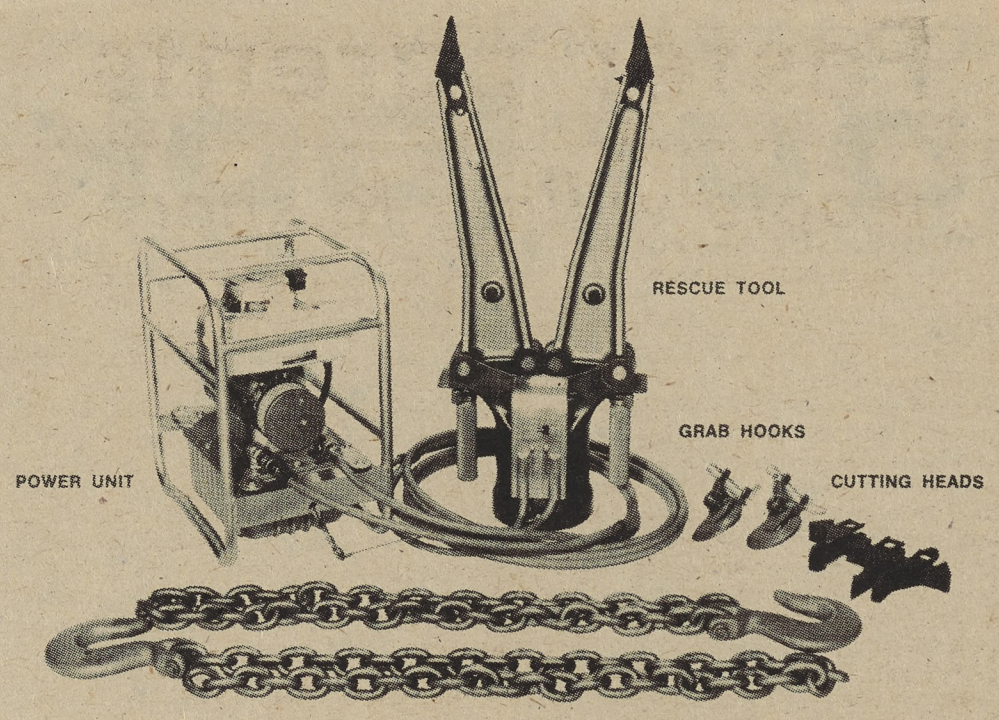
MEMBERS OF THE Carmel Valley Women's Club present a check to Chip Collins of the Carmel Valley Fire Department. The donation is the first to the "Jaws of Life Fund", a special account to be used for the purchase of this life-saving equipment. Shown with Collins are parliamentarian Elizabeth Hoisington, president Connie Riordan, Collins, out-going director Doris Bundgard and vice-president Ruth Francis. Donations to the fund may be made through the Carmel Valley Branch of the Bank of America or by contacting Elizabeth Hoisington. (For more on the Women's Club see Mildred Hattan's column on pages 5 & 6.)



THE "JAWS OF LIFE" rescue tool is a jaw-like device with twin forged titanium arms that can pull or lift five tons to free a trapped victim. The "jaws" open to a full 32 inches under a full load in only 40 seconds. The tool can be easily operated by the thumb-pressure of one person, who can free a trapped victim in seconds. It provides 10,000 pounds of usable force and is flameless for it does not have any grinding wheels or saw blades. The self-contained rescue tool may be stored in an auto trunk space. A special fund for the purchase of this tool for the Carmel Valley Fire Department has been started through a donation from the Carmel Valley Women's Club. Donations to the fund may be taken to the Carmel Valley branch of Bank of America. About $6,000 is needed to purchase the unit.

Carmelo literary awards presented

Story and Photos
By IRENE GAASCH

Brightly covered books matched the brightly shining faces of both parents and students at the Carmelo School literary tea.

Children's author, Doris Gates, an award-winning author herself, presented the awards and honors to the authors for writing. Enid Palmerlee, watercolor artist who once taught at Carmelo School, presented the awards and honors for illustrating.

The students are in the Beta class taught by Imogene Speiser and Shirley Graham. The Beta class is comprised of second and third grade studentss.

Though the parents of the children did the typing and binding of the books, the literary tea was done entirely by the children. Committees were formed for hospitality, refreshments, and even clean-up after the tea. The students elected Sabin Speiser to serve as master of ceremonies for the occasion.

After welcoming all guests, Sabin thanked all the parent helpers for their assistance in making the literary tea a success. Before turning the program over to Enid Palmerlee to present the illustration awards and honors, he explained the bookmaking process to the audience.

"Choosing from such excellently illustrated books was very difficult," said Palmerlee, wishing she could give awards and honors to each of the books. She presented one Carmeldacott winner and nine honor winners.

Winning the award was Angela James for her book "Chip Chipmonk". Honors were won by David Awamleh for "How the Parrot Learned to Talk;" Stephanie Fuerstner for "The Mouse Who Wanted to Be King;" Mike Giffin for "Trip to the Unknown World;" Greg Guzaitis for "The Animal Life;" Sharon Hendricks for "200 Years from Now;" Lana Rossi for "The Horse Called Venvet;" Fritz Steckler for "My Favorite Poems;" Sabin Speiser for "The Adventures of the Supersonic Formula;" and Berndt Stolfi for "The Bear That Eats Bark".

Children's author Doris Gates said she too had trouble making a decision and that she was delighted with the imaginative writing of all the authors. She said she was leary of any book that had been dictated to an older writer but that reading the books "certainly changed her mind". She presented Randa Karadsheh a story winner award for her book, "The Slave's Wheelbarrow" and Tracy Steele an award for poetry. Seven honor Carmelobery awards were given. They are: Lannette Berge for "Smoy's Adventure;" Jenny Foster for "The Princess and the Unicorn;" Carol Sepersky for "Fantasia Fawn;" John Van Zander for "Space and Underwater Travel with Alley;" and Zoe Zanides for "The Fox That Loves Lollipops".

Each of the three award winners read their books before the refreshments were served out on the lawn. Then the books were presented to the library where they will be kept until each of the students graduates from Carmelo School.

ANGELA JAMES accepts a trophy for her award-winning book "Chip Chipmonk".

MASTER OF CEREMONIES for the Carmelo literary tea Sabin Speiser hands Randa Karadsheh the gift she won as story winner in the Carmelobery awards.

Foster parents

'people willing to share'

By LESLIE JOHNSON

They aren't problem children, but children with problems. There may be severe alcoholism in the family. A recently divorced woman may be so wrapped up in her own adjustment problems that she can't help her adolescent son cope with his. An automobile accident may have wrenched both mother and father from a young family with no relatives who can care for them.

"We need people who are willing to share their lives," says Beth Foley, group home coordinator for the Monterey County Department of Social Services.

What Foley dreams of are more group homes in Carmel Valley like the one Marguerite and Julius Andrews have in the Cachagua, where six young men are getting the food, exercise, discipline and love they need, in their own community, but away from the systems that were keeping them underfed, unrested and in some cases in trouble at school.

Foley emphasizes the children she needs home for are not in trouble with the law.

"These adolescents shouldn't be confused with children from the probation department. They have committed no offenses," she says.

They are simply children who need special attention for various reasons, and they will require attention from special people, Foley says, in order to break the cycles keeping them under.

"We work closely with the Carmel School District, because many of these children need special education. For example, if the child comes from a family where there is severe alchoholism and everyone else is dead drunk by noon, he probably hasn't attended school," Foley says.

"We have to look at the long range objective for these children because in four or five years, they'll be completely on their own. In order for them to survive, they have to be able to read and do simple arithmetic, so it often means remedial work at school and work at home with the foster parents," Foley continues.

The Andrews established the first group home in the new program in 1975 when they moved here from Wisconsin. The most recent addition to their ranch brings to 34 the number of young people who have touched their lives in the many years they have been foster parents.

Their 30 acre ranch has a main home building with a table big enough to accomodate six growing young men, and there is plenty of space for hiking, catching gopher snakes and playing with lizards — after chores are done. A roomy bunkhouse taken care of by the boys themselves gives each of them the privacy all adolsecents need.

Margeurite Andrews believes strongly in the young people in their home. "I can't believe that teenagers are as rotten as a lot of people like to say they are. When I hear people criticizing children's behavior, I tell them to take a good look at themselves first," she says.

"They are really little treasures," she says. "Oh, they're not perfect by a long shot. We have arguments and we have fights, just like any family, but our boys look at each other like they are brothers."

Lots of criticism of teenagers is "unfair," she says. "They are victims of circumstances, which is very heartbreaking. They've tried and tried, and they're pushed against the wall."

"Most of our boys are at sixes and sevens when they come here," Mrs. Andrews says. "It's fun to watch them grow and change. We had one boy here for about four weeks when he needed to be taken to the doctor, who showed him he had gained 18 pounds."

BETH FOLEY, county coordinator for group homes, and Marguerite Andrews, a Valleyite who participates in the group home program.

GEORGE MARTIN, one of the Andrews' foster children, returned to Carmel Valley recently to visit Mrs. Andrews while he's on leave from the army.

She continues, "His parents had probably thought they were taking good care of him, not deliberately mistreating him. But he was used to eating all his meals out and not keeping any particular hours. The television set was his best friend — he can tell you any horror story that's been on after 11 p.m."

Beyond regular hours and nutritious food, Foley says, the group process can be the most effective curative for adolescents. "In a group, the children tend to take of problems themselves. The parent-child hassle is minimized by the influence of other children. If JoJo doesn't do the dishes and Maria has to do them in her place, Maria is going to let JoJo know she's angry and feels unfairly treated," she says.

"In most cases, the children have had difficulty relating to adults before. If you lay down the basic rules and let them go on their own in the group, they can arrange duties, set up awards and punishments," Foley says.

With the Andrews, the group process begins even before a child is placed in the home. Prospective members of the "family" spend part of a day and one night with the group. He then decides is he can fit in, while the family meets separately to decide if they believe they can work with him.

George Martin, one of the Andrews' "children" from Wisconsin, recently visited them at their Cachagua home, on leave after a 13-month tour of duty with the Army in Korea. "The arrangement is really a two way street, and it always has been with the Andrews.Everyone must agree to work together. If there's one blackball for any substantial reason, you just don't get to come," he says.

Mrs. Andrews explains, "While the boy is here, he is treated the same as if he were here full time. He has chores to do. Bedtime is 9 p.m. We find out what he knows about hygiene, and if we neglect to tell him what he needs to know, the boys handle it. We explain that he is going to live with different people and adjust to us and that we will have to adjust to him."

The Andrews have used that system all during the nine years they have cared for foster children. Of the 34 children, boys have stayed as long as six years and as short as 1½ hours, because of the contract process.

"One boy came to visit and we showed him his room. A little later, he asked to go look at his room alone, then came back downstairs. One of our other boys went up to his own room, and it had been pilfered. The new boy wouldn't admit what he had done, so the social worker searched him and found what had been taken. That boy begged and pleaded and cried, but we couldn't let him stay. If he had been honest about taking something, he probably would have been able to," Mrs. Andrews relates. (In Wisconsin, the Andrews accepted children on juvenile probation, which is not the case with the group home situation.)

While the Andrews treat their boys all as members of the family and often take trips together, there are dark moments in being a foster parent. Mrs. Andrews says, "There are days when I just want to dig a hole and throw the whole crew in. But I guess most families are like that. And later one of them will come in and nudge my foot and say 'Come on, Ma, it's not all that bad.' That's when I feel like I could melt down and crawl under the rug and not leave a lump."

"The hardest part is when a child leaves to go back to his own home and you know the situation there hasn't really changed. I live in fear the child will get in trouble, such bad trouble that he can't get foster care again and will wind up in an institution or in jail," she continues.

"I've told social workers when I thought children weren't ready and have usually been right. One child went back and a month later was in an institution and won't be out of that for another year," she says.

The most important qualification for a foster parent, Mrs. Andrews says is, "You have to want these children. You can't look on them as a commodity. You don't just shuffle them back and forth. They're pretty worldly. They may con you, but you can't con them."

Martin, speaking from experience, continues, "They really shouldn't be too old. I was in one family where the man retired after I was there for six months, and they really didn't want to do anything."

The Andrews play ball with their boys, take them on at least one outing a month, and have plans for good recreational facilities for the boys, including a tennis court and volleyball equipment. But Martin emphasizes it is the Andrews' sincerity of motivation that makes their group home work so well. The influence of a strong male figure such as Andrews is extremely important, he says.

"I called Mrs. Andrews 'Ma' almost from the beginning, but I've always respected Mr. Andrews so much that he's either 'Mr. Andrews' or 'Sir.' He's a really good man, and you know when he means business," Martin says.

Mrs. Andrews explains, "Mr. Andrews was brought up by older parents who believed that children were seen and not heard. It was a difficult childhood for him, and he appreciates what some of these kids have gone through. He's a very sober-faced, serious man, but he more than meets these

28th Fireman's Ball

Carmel Valley Fire Chief Chip Collins and his fire laddies are looking forward to a pleasant social evening with Valley residents and guests at the 28th Annual Fireman's Ball, Saturday, June 19 at Hidden Valley Music Seminar.

It is the one evening of the year when the department allows neighboring firemen to "stand-by" while they take time from a busy schedule that during the past year included 83 fire calls; 146 first aid calls, and averaged 100 hours per man in training programs.

Dancing to the music of the Royals from 9-1 a.m. for a tax deductible donation of $3 for singles and $5 per couple is a good place for a reunion of old friends according to social chairman, Dick Crane, and his committee members, Larry Cisneros, Ken Van Hagen, and Augie Acuna.

Libations will be available and no guests under 21 will be admitted.

Happy Birthday, Mabel

A birthday cake topped with eighty-eight candles highlighted the birthday dinner given for Mrs. Mabel Love by three generations of her family in Pacific Grove.

A long time Valley resident, the octagenarian now makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Norman Friddle. Cards will reach the celebrant at her new address; 1029 Del Monte, Pacific Grove.

The inner strengths of most people are based on what they did as children. What a kid thinks he can do has a direct bearing on what the grown-up-kid is willing to try. Do nothing as a child — you'll do nothing as an adult. Failures are made not born.

All children have 24 hours a day and all children do "something" with their time. They don't really do "nothing". But some activities are more "something" than others.

Think back. Which do you remember more clearly? Hours spent hanging around the house turning TV on and off? Or the tallest tree you ever climbed?

Which have you saved in your memory box? Reams of homework: "I seen-saw him yesterday." Underline the correct verb. Or the gee whiz whatchamacallit you made at summer camp.

It's a rare adult that doesn't have stored away a soap carving, a braided belt, a twisted wire friendship ring, or a hand painted plaster plaque. And that precious whatchamacallit has a great deal to do with your present abilities to drive in traffic, invest money, take on responsibilities, or tell off the boss.

Home and school and cartoon morning on TV are all very well but often it is summer camp that brings out the best in a child. Summer camp is motivation, it's challenge, it's real, it's a high point. The right sort of summer camp encourages a kid to measure himself against his daydreams. It eases a young person into investing himself in the kinds of important experiences that pay off in growing up.

But there are summer camps and there are summer camps. The best are those closest to the raw real heat of wildness. And those are expensive. They have to be, what with transportation and sleeping quarters that protect the children from raw real wildness at night. A friend of mine sent her oldest child to a mountain ranch last summer. $600 for three weeks! "It's unfortunate," she is saying this summer with dawning horror, "that this kid isn't an only child."

There are day camps of course. They are cheaper. Often they meet in city parks or schoolyards and are a pale version of everyday life.

Now the children — and parents — of the Monterey Peninsula area are being offered an unique opportunity in day camps. Jane Brittell who teaches riding at Ray Hackworth's Training Stable has organized a day camp there. Only two miles up Carmel Valley Road from Highway One the big red and white barns and the 1,000 acres of working cattle ranch which lead into the pine forests of Jacks Peak Park are very well located for this sort of activity. Few other urban centers have such wilderness inserted into their immediate neighborhoods.

Further, few urban centers have real cattle ranches nearby. Like other endangered species, ranchers and cowboys are usually displaced far out into the shrinking boonies. But Ray Hackworth remains an unaltered symbol of Alte California quietly producing working horses and market beef in salty contrast to the city cowboys who try to playact what they've read about.

Jane Brittell who first rode with Sue Sally Hale has been riding for Ray Hackworth

Entertainment

Joe Regelski

It's official! Landford and Zobler have decided to retire from the Peninsula entertainment scene and devote their time to their songwriting.

Explains Jon Zobler, "We've reached the level where it's time to work on our own music and not that of others. Nine years of going from club to club is a long time to have someone come in and discover you".

Bob Langford feels the same way. He has already found steady employment outside of the music realm. "It's time to move on to other things. We may sit in for a club owner once in a while or entertain at a special party for friends, but we've decided to work on our own music from now on," said Bob.

Bob and Jon's move is a smart one. Listening to them is a pleasure and it should not be impeded by a table of drunks or people wanting to hear the latest hits. Their harmonies are sophisticated enough to be appreciated by the recording and concert public and perhaps this upcoming period will provide the creative catalyst and break they deserve.

Present plans call on them to play at the Kings Cross Station Wednesday through Saturday nights through June and then end their lounge-playing days at the Hatchcover on a Thursday through Saturday basis beginning July 8. And then it's on to buying some four channel equipment and the slow, steady process of songwriting.

Vicki and Paul finished their current stand at the Holiday Inn, Monterey last weekend with a packed house on Saturday evening. The talented duo will be concentrating on their recording career in the next few months and are scheduled to return to the Inn on Sept. 6... Carmel resident Michael Nesmith will present his concert-rock-ballet "The Prison" this weekend at the Palace of Fine Arts in San Francisco. Nesmith, who was one of the Monkees and has recorded four solo albums on the RCA label, is the owner of locally-run Pacific Arts Corporation, Inc. which recently regrouped the critically acclaimed rock group Kaleidoscope for a reunion album.

RADIO BIZ: KRML Owner Sam Salerno has taken over the 9-noon weekend shift vacated by Ed Dickinson's move to KIDD and will feature CBS tapes of such stars as Ella Fitzgerald, Freddy Martin and Russ Morgan. Sam also plans to emphasize show music and movie scores that are rarely heard on local airwaves.

AND ALL THAT JAZZ: Last Sunday's crowd for the regular afternoon jazz jam at the Barrelhouse was a bit sparse. There was a definite swing to the avant garde and perhaps this was a bit much for people looking for more structured fare for a Sunday afternoon. I also noticed fewer local jazz folks coming in to jam with the house band which puts a lot of pressure on the basic unit for the four-hour set.

I hope that jazz lovers will take heed of these early warning signals and back the guys this weekend.

A loud Bravo for '110 in the Shade'

By JOE REGELSKI

I'm beginning to believe that any production involving Bill Asp has the potential to turn into theatrical gold. Having stolen the spotlight at the Cannery Row Dinner Theatre with his recent starring roles in "Mary, Mary" and "Sleuth", Asp has taken on the director's garb for the Row's present production of N. Richard Nash's "110 In The Shade" and a loud "bravo!" is in order for his efforts.

This is the Row's first attempt at a musical and Asp's selection of a cast that can deliver with zest and believability is almost perfect.

The story centers about the Curry family who, like other folk in the 1930s set scenario, are worried about the drought that has hit their area. There is also concern on the part of the men in the Curry clan that their sister Lizzie will end up an old maid and efforts are made to hitch her to sheriff File.

Enough of the plot. Suffice to say there is a lot to be said on the subjects of self confidence and perserverance. Be it also said that the "sleeper" of this cast is Robbie St. John who portrays Jimmie Curry — a simple country lad in love with his girl and life and always looking at the brighter side of folks. St. John is never out of context in his role as a hick yet at the same time his comedic and dancing timing are flawless. Comedy relif is needed continuously to offest the message scenes in the musical and St. John is always there.

Asp's selection of Kathy Collins and Drake Russell as the romantic leads is an excellent pairing which comes to the fore in the "A Man and a Woman" sequence. Sincerity wins over sentimentality and the result is a production that has a lasting impression on the audience.

And then there is the rainmaker Starbuck overpoweringly played by Danny Gochnauer. Starbuck is a weaver of dreams and Danny makes you feel that any fantasy is there for the asking.

The one weak link in the chain is Robert J. Berman's portrayal of the father of the Curry family. One may attribute his flatness and lack of enthusiasm to opening night nervousness, but I would think that a veteran of 25 years of community theatre could overcome such difficulties.

My advice to the theatre public: Forget your cares for one night and join Bill Asp and company in their search for the rainmaker.

A tip of the hat is due you, Mr. Asp.

Though the play was outstanding, the dinner service provided by Steinbeck Lobster House as caterers for the theatre was atrocious. Problems have existed with the dinner service consistently in the past, or at least each time this reviewer has attended a dinner-show in the theatre.

Cold food and poor service have plagued excellent productions since the theatre's beginnings. Until Steinbeck works its problems out I suggest that the public attend the show only.

CAA exhibits open

The works of Jeanne Bellmer and Jack Bevier are on exhibit at the Carmel Art Association galleries through July 7.

Mrs. Bellmer, recipient of several juried show awards, has recently had one of her paintings accepted by the American Watercolor Society for its nationwide touring show.

Jack Bevier's subject matter for his dry brush paintings includes crop pickers in the Salinas Valley as well as nostalgic scenes of deserted barns and farm equipment. Bevier won first prize for one of his works entered in the Monterey County Fair last year and this spring was the recipient of a special award from the California National Watercolor Society.

The Carmel Art Association galleries are on the west side of Dolores Street between 5th and 6th. The galleries are open daily from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Music workshop set

Concert Pianist Maria Cisyk will be Monterey Peninsula College's Distinguished Artist in Residence this summer and will conduct a five-week workshop on the campus beginning June 14.

The workshop will focus on the relationship between 19th and 20th century music and Romanticism and will be held Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to noon in the MPC Music Hall. It is designed for persons who are interested in music but who are not necessarily musicians.

Ms. Cisyk was born in Bayreuth, Germany, of Ukrainian parents who came to the United States when she was four. She grew up in New York and her first musical studies were with her father, the late Wolodymyr Cisyk, a concert violinist.

At Juillard School of Music she earned bachelor and master's degrees in music followed by a teaching fellowship in music and theory. At Yale University School of Music she received a second master's degree and completed work for a doctorate.

A $15 registration fee will be charged. Further information on the workshop is available by contacting MPC Community Services 373-5522, or Sophie Harpe (evenings), 624-6117.

The Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring a beautification contest. (Sorry, boys, no bathing beauties in this one.) Everybody is getting ready to clean up, spruce up, and plant flowers in the business areas, along the roadsides and in vacant lots. We want to have the Valley neat and pretty and the deadline is June 19.

All business and professional people are invited to enter. You may choose any area you wish to, use this form to enter the contest, and give it to the Bank of America, Carmel Valley Market, or Strathmeyer Real Estate by June 18. To aid you in carting off weeds and trash, we will put four dumpsters at the following locations June 17, 18 and 19: Monte Mart, Safeway, Del Fino Place and the Community Center. (No old furniture or appliances says the Disposal Service.) Winners in all four categories will receive their awards at the Chamber-sponsored steak barbecue Friday night, June 25, 6:30, at Hidden Valley Music Seminars. You may enter the beautification contest without attending the barbecue. You may also help us beautify the Valley without entering the contest. Look around for areas that need your attention and care.

Can you donate some plants or cuttings for neighbors to plant? Many things will root easily with a little water and care: ivy, succulents of all kinds, geraniums, fuchsias (in the shade), and how about seeds? Drop off everything you can spare at the Valley Lodge early Saturday morning, June 19. Contestants who need plants, seeds, etc. are asked to pick them up at the Lodge about 10 a.m. on that day.

Giants continue league lead

By ART BLACK, JR.

The Rapid Blueprint Giants continue to lead the Carmel Senior League with a 4-1 record through last weekend. The Carmel Police Youth Athletic Association Athletics have emerged as the second place team, one game behind Rapid at 3-1, and last week's second place team, the Kiwanis Tigers, are hot on the trail with a 3-2 record through last Saturday.

In last week's games, on Tuesday, June 1, the Carmel Host Lions defeated the Kiwanis Tigers 6-1 behind the pitching of Sina Sotoodeh and a fine offense by John Harbert, who homered for the Lions. On Wednesday, June 2, the Athletics beat the Padres of Bruno's Market 10-4 after a lead-off inning of five runs. Mark Dodd picked up the win for the A's, and Micah Willingham was charged with the loss. Cory Bliesner doubled for the Athletics.

In a game that was plagued with "5000 walks", according to the score-keeper, the Carmel Host Lions trounced the Dental Dodgers 12-3 last Thursday at the Carmel High School diamond. John Harbert got the win, Kip Murchison was tagged with the loss. Leading hitter was Sina Sotoodeh of the Lions, who went 2-for-3 at the plate. Also last Thursday, at the Carmel Middle School field, the Rapid Blueprint Giants blanked the Kiwanis Tigers 5-0 behind the pitching of Scott Thigpen. John Lucido of the Tigers, who was the leading hitter with a perfect 3-for-3, was also the losing pitcher.

Last Saturday, there was a triple-header scheduled on the Carmel High School diamond. In the first game, the CPYAA Athletics shut out the Dental Dodgers 7-0. David Spear of the Dodgers was the game's leading hitter with a 2-for-3 mark, but was tagged with the loss as Mark Dodd was credited with the shutout.

In the second game Saturday, the Carmel Rotary Mets downed the Bruno's Padres 12-2, scoring in every inning but the fifth. The Padres were shut out in every inning but the third, when they scored their two runs. Steve Selle of the Mets doubled and was the game's leading hitter with a .750 mark (3-for-4). Ricky Kashfi picked up the win for the Mets, Pat Kelly was tagged with the loss for the Padres. In Saturday's nitecap, the Kiwanis Tigers tagged the Rapid Blueprint Giants with their only loss thus far this season. After spotting the Giants three runs in the first three innings, the Tigers held them scoreless in the last three innings while bursting forth with four runs in the fourth, a singleton in the fifth and three more runs in the sixth inning for a final score of 8-3. John Pirotte was credited with the win for the Tigers, Peter Shepard got the loss for Rapid. Kevin Washington and Peter Shepard both doubled for the Giants. The Tigers initiated a double play from John Lucido to Jeff Hogans, and Lucido and Hogans were also the leading hitters for the Tigers, Lucido going 2-for-4 and Hogans 3-for-4. Andy Fremier led the Giants' hitters with a 3-for-4 mark.

In the only other game played in the Carmel Senior League last week, the Rotary Mets and the Dental Dodgers played off the 13-13 tie of May 27. The game was called at the end of six innings with the score tied 13-13. When play resumed last Friday, the Mets and Dodgers were both held scoreless in the seventh inning, and the Mets didn't score in the top of the eighth. In the bottom of the eighth inning, Mike Doran was the first to bat for the Dodgers, and grounded out to the shortstop. David Spear singled, and stole second base. Adam Odegard then singled, scoring Spear for the winning run. Chris Cryns was credited with the win, Mark Clark was charged with the loss, as the Dodgers defeated the Mets 14-13.

kids half-way. They just have to go 40 per cent with him."

Andrews' one goal is to send one of his boys through college, Martin says. "He'd send a kid all the way through medical school, if one of them wanted to go, and the boy wouldn't have to buy so much as a guitar string," Mrs. Andrews says wistfully.

What Beth Foley needs is a family willing to open their hearts and homes to other boys in the county, a family willing to make the effort and reap the rewards of providing group homes for adolescents from troubled homes.

Part of the motivation for the program is to save taxpayers money. For group home placements, families receive $305 a month per child, many of whom would be placed in institutions outside the county where the minimum charge is $750 a month. All of the children are from Monterey County, and Foley attempts to place children in homes within their own school districts to keep disruption of their lives at a minimum.

None of the children requires 24-hour supervision and they are not in trouble with the law. "We're not trying to save the world with this program," Foley says. Two of the group homes are run by people in the 25 to 35 age group, the other two by people like the Andrews. All have had some kind of experience with children of this age group, even if it is only the experience of coming from a large family.

Licensing by the county is required to determine that each child will have enough living space. No child is simply placed in a group home; the parents must decide, either on their own or in consultation with other children at the home, if the prospective family member will be allowed to come. Each set of parents sets the rules for their own homes and establishes discipline in a manner they deem most effective for their family group.

Foley says the group home system is one way to combat the forces that encourage adolescents to become problem adults. "This makes care possible when it will do the most good. Without a program like this, the problems will not be given attention. We'll probably wait until the child is beyond redemption and becomes a big social problem," she says.

"We seem reluctant to put money where it will do the most good. We'll spend money on drug treatment programs and prisons, but our problems start when these people are children and young adults," Foley says.

With the adolescents she hopes to place in group homes, Foley says, "The situation is very much like staking a storm blown young tree. The stake, in this case, is the stabilizing effect of homes such as the Andrews." Carmel Valley residents interested in the group home program can contact Beth Foley at 899-2571.

Eskaton takes over Rippling River

Eskaton, a Sacramento based nonprofit corporation, has been named management agent for the Rippling River facility here, effective June 1.

Eskaton (a Greek word meaning "the beginning of a new time") was incorporated in 1967, the outgrowth of dialogue between clergy and laymen of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

Jack Billingsley, director of long term care for Eskaton, has been named project manager for the Eskaton Rippling River Center.

Billingsley earned his BA at Eastern Kentucky State University; his MBA at Syracuse University, New York State, and his MPA (Master of Public Administration) at the University of Arizona. He is certified as a specialist in gerontology by the University of Arizona, and both of his masters degrees were awarded with honors.

Prior to joining Eskaton, Billingsley was the administrator at the California Christian Home in Rosemead, and was the executive director of the Masonic Homes of California in San Francisco.

He is a member of the board of directors of the California Association of Homes for the Aged; A member of the board of directors of the Serra Residential Center for the Developmentally Disabled, and an advisor to the Board of Examiners of Nursing Home Administrators. He is an advisor to the Ethel Percy Andrus Center, Institute of Gerontology at the University of Southern Cailfornia.

six years and now teaches horsemanship there.

Assisting her in the camp operation will be her mother, Mary Osgood, longtime junior high teacher at Los Arboles School in Marina. Also Lisa Johnson and Julie Chiappe will be counselors and there will be at least two younger counselors-in-training to keep the ratio of counselors to campers high. Twenty-five boys and girls ages seven to 13 will be brought to the ranch by their parents or carpools at 10 a.m. and picked up at 4 p.m. except on sleep-out nights. The camp opens June 21 and runs two weeks until July 2, Monday through Friday, and costs $100 for the two weeks.

What will the kids do at camp? They'll do just what kids have done at ranch camps since the first cowboy strummed a guitar. They'll do the traditional things.

They start off with a morning gathering to sing songs, assign groups or chores or contests, raise the flag, raise the spirits, and get ready to raise the roof.

In smaller groups there will be riding, arts and crafts, hiking, horsecare, cooking, games, rest time, explore time, nature study, trail rides, talk fests, and time to enjoy new friends. For the whole group there will be eating together, singing together, campfire and camping out one night, story time, presentation day, and one very special day when they all climb the mountain.

The mountain is Jacks Peak, the highest point on the Monterey Peninsula. From the ranch, trails not open to the public climb through oak canyons, cross great grassy pastures where the bare broken rocks announce the path of the giant Tularcitos Fault, and ascend into the pine forests, Monterey's last virgin stand of its own Monterey Pine. This will be an all day hike for the campers. They will carry their lunches and be rewarded by the greatest lunchtime view of anyone in California. The view from Jacks Peak extends from Santa Cruz to Big Sur. The whole Peninsula is laid out like a map at your feet and just a little further away are the cities of Salinas, Castroville, and Moss Landing.

Somewhere are 25 boys and girls who will have something more to remember of this summer than daytime TV. They'll remember learning to saddle and ride a horse. They'll remember playing hide and seek in the hayloft. They'll remember living the old west while it was still alive and kicking. They'll remember the day they climbed the mountain.

There are still some places available for campers. If interested call Jane Brittell, 624-6598 days (let it ring, she has to tie up a horse before she can answer) or 372-8274 nights.

Salary proposals presented

Initial proposals for salary and fringe benefit increases show a wide disparity between employes and the Carmel Unified School District.

Both certificated and classified employes presented proposals to the board May 26, calling for roughly 12-13 percent increases in salaries. In addition, the certificated employes proposed increases in substitute teacher pay, extra duty pay (coaches), personal emergency leave, health insurance and early retirement. Classified employes also asked for increases in vacation time and a vision care plan.

The district presented its counter-proposals in a specially called public hearing June 2. The district's initial offer calls for a one percent increase on the salary schedule for both classified and certificated personnel. In addition, the district would absorb the increased cost of existing fringe benefits with the total salary increase computed at three percent.

The district agreed to increasing substitute teacher pay, but only by the same one percent offered to the certificated staff without the cost of fringe benefits.

All other requests by both certificated and classified employes were not agreed to in the district's initial offer.

Negotiations on the proposals, estimated by board president Richard Wilsdon at a total cost of approximately $600,000, will now be held between district and employe representatives.

The board, at its May 26 meeting, awarded a contract for relocatable classrooms for the high school to Terrace Enterprises of Newark. Total bid price for the classrooms is $63,924.

Assistant superintendent for business services Walter Hinton told the board that the relocatables should be ready prior to the start of school next fall. He also explained that total cost of the project had been pared down some since the district decided to perform necessary demolition work rather than put it out to bid.

Harris Taylor, superintendent of schools, reported to the board that 50 percent of Carmel High students attempting the latest high school proficiency examination achieved passing scores. Statewide, he added, 32 percent of students taking the exam passed. Sixty students from Carmel High took the exam March 27.

Robert Whitehead, assistant superintendent for instruction and personnel, told the board that John Esaki, a third year reading teacher at Middle School, has been selected on a competitive basis by the Japanese Cultural League to be one of four second-generation Japanese-Americans to participate in an eight-week study tour of Japan this summer. Esaki will study for four weeks at Tokyo University and receive a four-week tour of Japan, all expenses paid.
